

The Salt Lake Tribune

Utah rally: End police shootings of dogs

Rally • Speakers call for change in how officers react when they encounter family pets.

By Pamela Manson The Salt Lake Tribune

• October 26, 2014 10:10 am

This is an archived article that was published on sltrib.com in 2014, and information in the article may be outdated. It is provided only for personal research purposes and may not be reprinted.

To the Guerreros, dogs are part of the family.

So on Saturday, the family — mother, two daughters, a grandson, a granddaughter, a great-grandson and a few four-legged members of the clan — joined a rally on the steps of the Utah Capitol calling for an end to police shooting dogs.

They hope their show of force, along with about 50 other people and a dozen canines who joined the rally, will lead to change.

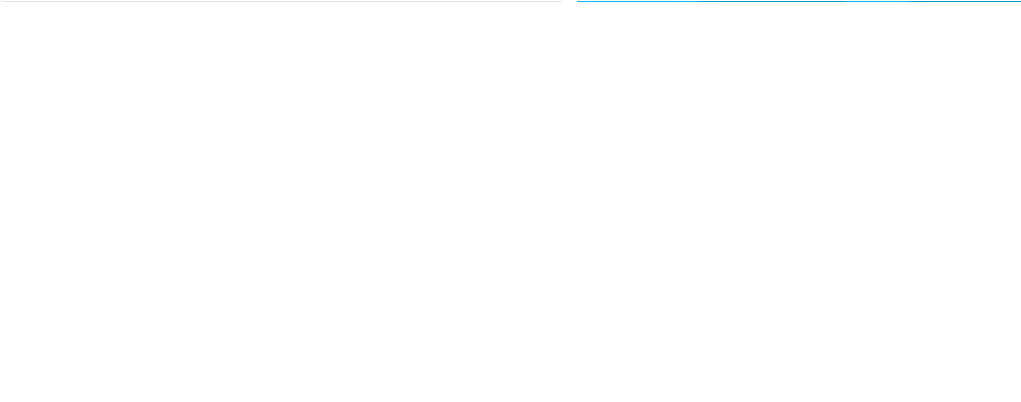

"It shows them we're not going to let it go," Wendi Guerrero said of the campaign to change how police react when they encounter a family pet.

The Salt Lake City demonstration was held as part of a nationwide protest planned by Freeze Don't Shoot, an organization pushing for changes in procedures and training involving law enforcement encounters with dogs. The group has called for marches on state capitols in support of mandatory, non-lethal containment of canines.

In Utah, the death of a Weimaraner named Geist ignited controversy and national discussion about how law enforcement officers should handle pets that act aggressively.

A Salt Lake City police officer fatally shot the dog on June 18 in owner Sean Kendall's fenced-in backyard during a search for a missing 3-year-old boy who was later found safe at his own home. Police have said the officer used lethal force because he felt threatened by Geist.

The police department's internal affairs investigation found the officer "acted within policy." And an independent Civilian Review Board exonerated the officer of the complaint of excessive force lodged by Kendall.

Speakers at the Saturday rally read accounts of police shootings of dogs in other cities. Dave Gibbs said that what happened to Kendall could happen to anyone.

"We stand today in solidarity with pet owners across the United States," Gibbs said. "We have had enough."

Kendall said "people are sick and tired of coming home and having to bury their dog." He urged the crowd to vote and hold officials accountable as a way to stop the shootings.

"No one should have to go through what I went through," Kendall said.

Brett Black, a Libertarian candidate in District 44 for a seat in the Utah House of Representatives, also encouraged the attendees to make their wishes known at the ballot box.

"Our whole system is corrupt," Black said. "We have to demand that we have cameras on police."

Merle French said advocates for change should interact face-to-face with public officials and attend council meetings to make their wishes known.

"We must be persistent, " she said. "We must be proactive and engaged."

pmanson@sltrib.com

Twitter: @PamelaMansonSLC

Sponsored

GLUCOCIL

Blood Sugar? Read This.

The simple, natural solution for normal blood sugar that takes GNC by storm. Try it now

Learn More

200 Comments The Salt Lake Tribune

Login ▾

Recommend Share

Sort by Oldest ▾

Join the discussion...

LOG IN WITH

OR SIGN UP WITH DISQUS

Name

FieldingBandolier • 3 years ago

If pepper spray wards off bears, then surely it works on dogs. We need to return to police policies that emphasize non-lethal responses, whether to animals or people.

23 ^ | ▾ • Reply • Share ›

Emophilic → FieldingBandolier • 3 years ago

As long as people and animals use lethal responses, police have to be able to respond in kind. This is not a